

Genetics, PhD

Learning Outcomes

The PhD in genetics will:

- develop students' ability to learn relevant literature, and to design and complete successful experiments with rigor and reproducibility;
- develop students' ability to communicate concepts, present and publish scientific data, and interact with diverse audiences;
- facilitate students as they acquire teaching skills and develop teaching effectiveness in the classroom and in the laboratory; and
- prepare students for diverse careers in the discipline.