Career Advancement

Gender, women's, and sexuality studies (GWSS) majors develop the critical skills and problem-solving abilities needed for engaging the challenges of contemporary life. Graduates work in diverse settings, such as government and nonprofit agencies, newspaper offices, human resource departments, museums, theaters, international human rights organizations, schools, and hospitals. They do fundraising, political organizing, teaching, writing, research, advocacy work, counseling, diversity training, and marketing. They become social workers, nurses, midwives, doctors, editors, librarians, business managers, grant writers, campaign directors, educational administrators, program coordinators, lawyers, and professors.

A GWSS undergraduate education provides a solid foundation for pursuing graduate degrees from schools of social work, public health, law, education, international relations, public affairs and public policy, and medicine. The major also prepares students for a wide range of graduate programs, including gender and women's studies, history, anthropology, urban education, creative writing, political science, human rights, human sexuality, and counseling.

The Pomerantz Career Center offers multiple resources to help students find internships and jobs.
