Global Health Studies, Minor

Learning Outcomes
The minor in global health studies equips students to:

• apply interdisciplinary perspectives drawn from the social sciences and humanities to local and global health issues;
• analyze health and disease from biomedical, sociocultural, and environmental perspectives;
• understand how health issues affect domestic and international communities;
• recognize the ethical challenges involved in interventions designed to improve health and health equity across cultural and geographical boundaries.