Biostatistics, PhD

Learning Outcomes

Students will be able to:

- describe current statistical theory, methods, and practices used in health sciences;
- analyze data from experimental and observational studies;
- design modern modeling structures used in health sciences analyses and research;
- communicate research findings to various audiences in writing and through oral presentation; and
- interpret analytical results from health science studies.