

Community and Behavioral Health, Ph.D.

Financial Support

The graduate program coordinator and advisor works with admitted students to explore funding opportunities. A limited number of teaching and research assistantships are available. Assistantships offer financial support and tuition assessed at the resident tuition rate along with a tuition scholarship. They also provide valuable on the job training experience.

For more information on financing education through jobs, grants, and loans, contact the University's Office of Student Financial Aid.